What's New in the Radio Stream Player?

Radio Stream Player is a very simple application that allows you to listen to an online radio station with ease, relying on a large collection of web-based stations. The interface is just minimal and that's the point that makes Radio Stream Player a bit special, taking minimum space on your screen. Using MMS streams exclusively, Radio Stream Player places an icon in the Windows System Tray, thus giving you the option to instantly access its main window with a single click. While the program comes with several hundreds of channels, it also allows users to add their very own stations to the list, with required fields including station name, URLs, homepage and station status. Radio Stream Player sorts the available stations by country, so it's easy to find one that you like, with all information displayed right in the main window, alongside controls for muting, stopping and volume adjusting. Plus, the same main window is being used to show the three most played stations, pretty handy if you use the application on a regular basis. On the down side however, we missed a configuration screen that could let us tweak the program and change the interface or various other options. Plus, we couldn't bookmark stations, which means you have to get through the entire station collection every time. All in all, Radio Stream Player is a decent program that still needs a bunch of improvements in key areas. Plus, more predefined stations and a built-in bookmark manager are must haves. Documentation When using an online media streaming player, it is often necessary to access a list of stations and their basic information. This simple yet powerful program (aka an online radio tuner) can do just that. The usage of the application is rather simple: launch it, navigate to a station you like and use the info button to access all the necessary data. Moreover, you can bookmark a favorite station by clicking the small button located next to the info button. The interface can be made a little more attractive using skins, and a preview of the available station when launching is also a nice touch. But the best feature of the program is the large number of stations offered to download. Radio Stream Player is very well integrated with the Windows desktop, by not displaying a separate media player window. This approach maximizes available desktop space, which is especially important when we have to work on tight computer screens. The in-program list of available stations can be filtered by countries. When launching the program you are greeted with the following window: As soon as you enter a URL of a station you like, the following window is displayed: The most important fields include the name of the station, the home page, the stream URL and the official release date (if any). The search field can be used to find a station with an exact name, or
