— do you really need to do this?” For those of us who are strongly in the yes camp, having this choice gives us a leg up — you’ve gotta have a leg up for even this exercise. Don’t do it. Use the time you would be spending with angry, irrational people to engage in meaningful debate. When you’re forced to debate something that you really don’t care about, the result is usually a similar level of anger and vitriol that you’d get from the same people if they were discussing something you do care about.

Comparative Evaluation of an Automated and a Manual System for Measurement of Telomerase Activity in Short Term Cultures of Human Tumor Tissues.

Telomerase is a ribonucleoprotein responsible for telomere maintenance and its activity (TA) is correlated with cell proliferation and may be a prognostic marker in cancer. The current standard for TA measurement is polymerase chain reaction (PCR)-based telomeric repeat amplification protocol (TRAP) assay, which measures the relative amount of telomerase-dependent telomerase RNA component (TR) compared to the internal control gene (T). This assay is cumbersome and time consuming, and it has to be performed on frozen tissue samples. In this work, we compared an automated TRAP system with a conventional manual method for measurement of TA in short-term cultures of human tumor tissues. TA was analyzed by real-time TRAP analysis for a number of cell types. Apparent TRAP activity of the cultured cells is proportional to TA. There was no significant difference between the TRAP activity derived from frozen tissue samples and the activity from short-term culture of the same sample. Furthermore, the automated TRAP analysis has proven to be a useful alternative to the commonly used manual method for measurement of TA in routine clinical laboratories.
