Distinguishing the different diseases that present with the clinical features of arthritis is not always easy. When other disorders such as inflammatory rheumatic diseases, infections or intoxications are present, this may make the differential diagnosis more difficult. Therefore, a rare disease, generalized arthrosis, with a predominantly benign course may be overlooked. At first, a 14-year-old girl developed severe swelling and pain in the lower and upper extremities, with only some limitation of motion. The patient had also had an ear infection and then an upper respiratory tract infection. The laboratory tests were normal. The synovial fluid was sero-negative for bacteria and normal but it showed an elevated synovial white cell count. A synovial biopsy was made and revealed synovial hyperplasia and a marked infiltration by histiocytes with lymphocytes, plasma cells and occasional synovial cells. Fibrotic scars were present in the synovium. The diagnosis of generalized arthrosis was established. After an arthroscopic synovectomy, the patient recovered completely and a follow-up at seven years showed no signs of recurrence.Implementing a nurse-led protocol for sepsis resuscitation: an intervention designed to improve the response to patients presenting to the emergency department with signs of infection. To describe the development and implementation of a protocol for sepsis resuscitation, and the effects of the protocol in the emergency department on outcomes in patients presenting to the emergency department with a suspected infection. This was a non-randomised, pre-post intervention observational study of all new patients presenting to a hospital emergency department over a 14-month period. Data on patients with a suspected infection were collected from their medical records, including blood testing, clinical characteristics, time of presentation, time of arrival, intervention received, and outcome. A protocol for sepsis resuscitation was developed, based on international guidelines

"MikkoPPC Torrent Download is a small stand-alone program that creates a word completion dictionary for the PocketPC. Your PocketPC may not have a word completion dictionary and even if it has it may not have a dictionary created with MikkoPPC. So MikkoPPC works in all these situations, except the latter case. MikkoPPC takes two parameters, the first, mikoppc.exe, is the executable and the second is the Dictionaries Folder. When the program is run it creates a path from the first parameter to the second parameter in the system directory, and also creates an empty "word_completion_dict.dat" file in the dictionary_folder. MikkoPPC now loads the word completion dictionary into memory and after you select a word from a text box, it searches through it's memory with the string "Mikoppc.exe" as the search string. As soon as it finds a match it replaces the selection with the defined completion. Then you may either quit or save the file and exit." 07-09-2003, 03:10 PM jjoresko Before you actually buy one of the downloads, read the comments on the first post in the second page of this thread. I just bought the one that was described as being there to try to ensure that someone did this. The company clearly does not support the program. 07-10-2003, 03:07 AM TheoreticalStuff Hey, I've been reading all these posts, and I have a question: has anybody any experience with a PocketPC/Palm combo? Is it true that the PPC files for the PocketPC can't be accessed by the PocketPC software? I've done some research on the web and found conflicting reports.... so would appreciate any feedback. 07-10-2003, 08:07 AM jjoresko Quote: Originally posted by TheoreticalStuff Hey, I've been reading all these posts, and I have a question: has anybody any experience with a PocketPC/Palm combo? What's New In MikkoPPC?

Source Code / Data Files / Beta: Download the zip file (maybe a bit big, 32MB) It should contain: Microsoft Word language list ("LanguageCode.zip") PocketPC 2003 word completion "dyncompdict.dat" (and a few other items - see below) However, the list in the zip file will not work - it will only confuse the PPC, and annoy some users. It is merely used for data backup, and can safely be left out if you don't want to download it. More options There is a way to make the dictionary much smaller, though it removes some of the features of Word's normal word completion and it may not cover your needs (or even work at all, which is why we have a beta). If you do wish to reduce the size of this file, do the following: Remove the "dyncompdict.dat" file from the zip file. Open up the list in Microsoft Word (under the "Language Codes" -> "Language Code File" menu), and copy all the items into a new document. Close the document, and cut and paste the full list of item names into a new document. Remove the items listed in "Language Code File" you don't want by marking them with "=". Save the new document as "LanguageCode2.doc", and try adding this new one. A: I've downloaded MikkoPPc and the first thing I wanted was a word list (from any source) to use in Word 2003. I just want to add one from Wikipedia. I've downloaded the zip file, unzipped it and opened the file... I had to change the name of the file from LanguageCode.zip to LanguageCode2.zip and unzipped the file I then opened the file and copied the text listed under "Language Code File" to a new document. I then pasted the copied text from the new document to the "Definition List" under "Language Code" A: If you have an iPod touch 1st generation and the free iPod app, you should be able to download and install several different dictionaries into that app. There is no need to buy anything. The dictionaries I found were: English English -- Wiktion
