As the dimension of nanoparticles increases from the sub-micrometre to the nano-range, the colloidal stability of nano-suspensions becomes a bottleneck for their development. Here we describe a three-step protocol to develop stable nano-suspensions and investigate their potential applications. Firstly, we synthesized well-dispersed palladium nanoparticles with a diameter of 20-30 nm by a polyol process under ambient conditions. Then, we investigated the cytocompatibility of the Pd nano-suspension and observed cell adhesion and proliferation on the surface of the suspension. Finally, we proposed a biologically inspired method to induce the directed differentiation of human neural stem cells (hNSCs) and investigated the potential application of Pd nano-suspensions as a biomedically oriented material. This protocol allows functional material development by performing deliberate synthetic steps during the formation of a desired material (Pd) in an aqueous environment. include "permission to pass by the bench order of a reasonable nature, which merely furnish the semblance of a judicial proceeding, in the absence of the court, and would be resorted to on trivial matters and formalities, but which may be subsequently resorted to in case of necessity, and which may, therefore, be alluded to, and in due time be seasonably acted upon." N.J. Const. 1947, Art. 6, § 15, par. 3. I submit that the record does not reflect that the father proceeded "in the nature of a summary contempt," in that he did not have actual notice of the place and the time of the hearing which preceded the order adjudicating him in contempt. Such procedure does not constitute due process. If the "due process" requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment and of the New Jersey Constitution of 1947, art. 1, par. 1
