Crack is made by mixing the base of the drug (which is usually powder cocaine) with gasoline. Crack is made by mixing the base of the drug (which is usually powder cocaine) with gasoline. This mixture is then ignited, causing a rapid explosion that crushes the powder together. This creates a light-brown, pulpy, and sticky "cake", which may crack or break apart if the heat is not allowed to dissipate quickly enough. The smoke and fumes of the fire produce a feeling similar to the high of smoking marijuana or hashish, but at a much higher rate of infusion. COcaine is the absence of crack, and it is a powdery white or brown, odorless, finely. It was used to make fumigating powder or injectable cocaine, and is now illegal throughout the world. Today, it is usually cut with other substances, such as heroin, to make the powder more powerful, and highly addictive. The chemical structure of crack cocaine is virtually the same as that of cocaine, the active ingredient in cocaine itself. However, the shape of the molecule is different, due to the addition of solvents, such as gasoline. As a result, crack is brown rather than white, and has a very strong burning sensation.

The influence of living on a high-altitude plateau in Tibet on thyroid function and the effect of prolonged living at this altitude on women is not known. To determine the influence of living at a high-altitude plateau on thyroid function, and to investigate the effect of altitude on thyroid function in women. The study included 94 post-menopausal women living on a high-altitude plateau in Tibet and 100 women living at a low-altitude plain, in the same region, matched for age. Cases were women who were diagnosed as having thyroid disease by a physician in Urumqi. Serum levels of thyroxine (T(4)), triiodothyronine (T(3)), and thyroid-stimulating hormone (TSH) were measured in all participants, and free thyroxine (FT(4)) was calculated. Serum T(3) and FT(4) levels in the cases were significantly higher than those in the controls (P
